

If All Things Must Change

If all things must change with the passing of time
And the mighty must fall
And the fallen must rise
Then so must the wisdom be gone from the wise
And a song be denied of its pleasure

But when will the love lines be gone from your face
For such beauty as this is as timeless as space
And even when life's blood runs cold in your veins
The love that you gave will live forever
Will live forever

And when will the warmth in the heart of the home
Lie as cold as the caves or as still as the stone
And when will the years leave us alone
And the ties we have grown be severed
Surely never
For can't you see that some things never change
As the moon plays a tune with the tide's rolling waves
And the calendar cries as its counting off the days
As I count on a way that I can tell you

That what does it matter if I'm right or I'm wrong
As I try to describe in the lines of a song
That as long as the world's keeping on keeping on Then it's here we belong close together 'till forever
